"This year I have chosen to take my first year of university classes at Cumberland Regional College. I was able to save a lot of money by living at home and keeping my part-time job. All of my classes are quite small so there is a lot of one on one time with the professors. If I have a question, it is always answered. The staff at Cumberland is very accommodating and friendly to be around. This is a great program that I highly recommend."

"Taking classes off-campus is great because you get a lot of individualized assistance from the instructors and lab assistants."

Experience a variety of delivery modes

Whether studying off-campus or on-campus, today's students want maximum flexibility to accommodate hectic schedules. U of S students at Cumberland Regional College have the opportunity to experience a variety of delivery modes and materials specially designed to provide a rich learning experience:

- Off-campus lecture classes – qualified instructors teach these traditional face-to-face university classes at Cumberland Regional College.
- Televised classes – a variety of introductory classes can be taken at 5 receiving sites in the Cumberland College region of Melfort, Nipawin, Tisdale, Hudson Bay and Choiceland. These involve weekly televised interactive, instructor-led lectures and discussions; online resources; telephone and e-mail access to instructors and tutors; and specially developed print packages to guide you through lectures, assignments and textbooks.
- Online classes – join the e-learning revolution! U of S online courses are specially designed for the web by instructional design specialists to provide you with an optimum learning experience. Online discussion forums provide opportunities to interact with instructors and students.
- Independent Studies – study where and when you want. These enhanced correspondence courses involve print, and/or audio and video teaching tools and materials to make your learning experience a memorable one. Course guides and telephone or internet access to instructors ensure that you stay on track and get the help you need to be successful.
- Multi-mode classes – these classes involve a weekly audio conference with an instructor or tutor at designated sites. Face-to-face instruction is provided on-site every six weeks. Textbooks, audio-visual learning aids and specially developed print packages are integral to the multi-mode course.

Psych 110 students and professor. Students take face-to-face classes from U of S instructors who come to your community.

Sociology 110 students and proctor. Cumberland Regional College provides local tutors/proctors for a number of the online, independent studies and multi-mode classes.

Campus Saskatchewan

Campus Saskatchewan provides a virtual “one-stop shopping” source for post-secondary education and training in the province of Saskatchewan offered via the internet, television and video, correspondence, multi-mode and off-campus lecture classes. Campus Saskatchewan provides students the opportunity to enroll in classes offered by a variety of institutions. Visit www.campussaskatchewan.ca for a comprehensive catalogue of courses offered in these formats by all post-secondary educational institutions in the province.

“The benefit of smaller class size and overall college size leads to the feeling of community. I believe both the students and the instructors become more committed to the learning in this type of atmosphere.”

Kim Cross, Biology Lab Instructor
